

Kristin Davidse is Professor of English Linguistics at KU Leuven (University of Leuven). Her main research interest is the description of English grammar from a functional perspective. She has published on such topics as middle, existential and cleft constructions. She has also published on various processes of change such as grammaticalization, deictification and (inter)subjectification in the English noun phrase. She was one of the founding editors of the journal Functions of Language.