

Antonette diPaolo Healey received her Ph.D. from the University of Toronto and has taught in the Department of English, Yale University, and in the Centre for Medieval Studies and the Department of English, University of Toronto. She retired in 2014 as Editor of the Dictionary of Old English and as the Angus Cameron Professor of Old English Studies at the University of Toronto. Healey has led the project through many technological advances, most recently making available the Dictionary of Old English Corpus and the Dictionary of Old English online. More than sixty percent of the work of defining the 35,000 headwords of DOE has now been completed. For her work on the Dictionary of Old English, she has been the recipient of a number of research awards from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada, the National Endowment for the Humanities, Washington, the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, New York, and the British Academy, London, among others. She has served as Chair of the Publications Committee of the Modern Language Association and as a specialist adviser to the Ministry of Research, Government of Denmark, and to the Royal Irish Academy, Dublin. She currently serves on various advisory and editorial boards in her field in Canada, the US and England. Her areas of research interest include: Old English language and literature; meaning and its complexities; the history of lexicography, the intersection of language and culture; and computing in the humanities. She was made a Fellow of the Medieval Academy of America in 2014 and a Fellow of the Dictionary Society of North America in 2015.